UNIVERSITY OF SAN DIEGO SCHOOL OF LAW

VOL. 9, NO. 1 FALL/WINTER 1991/1992

Dear Advocate Reader,

This issue of the Advocate inaugurates a new look for USD's Law School alumni magazine. We hope you like it! As the Law School grows and the alumni association expands to meet the needs of its 6,600 graduates, we wanted to enhance the appearance of the magazine as well as make it more enjoyable to read. The table of contents will help direct you immediately to the section of most interest, whether that is the class notes, faculty news or the feature story. Don't forget the calendar on the back cover.

The magazine will be published semiannually with the Fall/Winter issue including a Dean's Report and the annual law Honor Roll of Donors. The other issue will be a Spring/Summer issue.

We have enclosed a form for you to complete and return with news, suggestions and nominations for awards or to indicate your interest in participating in alumni programs, law school programs or class reunion activities. We encourage you to fill it out and return it to the School of Law. We want to hear from you!

Sincerely,

Kathleen A. Quinn

A Year of Progress

DEAN'S REPORT

Kristine Strachan

Dear Friends of USD Law School:

Your Law School is strong, prospering and growing in distinction. Our progress is apparent on many fronts. It is a great pleasure to share some of our achievements and plans for this year.

After receiving the Price Chair in Public Interest Law and the Pardee gift for the Legal Research Center, it was almost too much to hope that another major gift would come our way so soon. We know the school has accomplished rapid and significant improvement, but it is always nice to have outside confirmation.

We are proud to be the recipients of another major gift. Through the generosity of Joanne and Frank Warren, a $2 million endowment will increase student scholarship support, enhance faculty teaching and research development, and fund special projects such as advanced computer-assisted instruction and research. In recognition of this magnificent gift, which will benefit students and faculty for generations to come, as well as for Mrs. Warren's long-time commitment to USD and for her work as chair of USD's successful $47.5 million capital campaign, the board of trustees dedicated the Law School building as Warren Hall. The faculty, students and alumni are deeply grateful to the Warrens.

We also were honored to receive a $400,000 endowment from the Spain family for student scholarship support. The Spain Family Endowed Scholarship program was made possible through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. James Spain of Newport Beach, Calif. Their son, Jim, is a 1979 graduate of the Law School. (See article in this issue.)

This year marked our first effort at an annual reunion weekend and class gift program. As you will see from the photos and story in this issue, the reunion was a smashing success, as was the class gift program. A total of 120 reunion alumni committed a total of $44,248 for student scholarship support. Gifts in support of student scholarships are especially appreciated because they are absolutely critical if we are to keep private legal education at USD within the reach of superb students from all economic means.

Our efforts to enhance the Law School as a center of intellectual enrichment for students, faculty, alums and the legal community are coming to fruition this year:

OCTOBER brought us the Siegan Memorial Lecture by Nobel Laureate Milton Friedman, which was attended by more than 500 people.

NOVEMBER marked the first program of the Community Defenders, Inc., Endowment. A conference on federal sentencing guidelines featured 12 distinguished experts, including 9th Circuit Justices Betty B. Fletcher and Pamela Ann Rymer, former U.S. District Judges William Schwarzer and J. Lawrence Irving, Santa Clara University Law Dean Gerald Uelman, USD Law Professor Kevin Cole and many major federal corrections officials. (See article in this issue.)

FEBRUARY will see USD host a major academic conference entitled "Risks and Wrongs," which will probe the intersections of contracts, torts, remedies and political theory. The conference will feature distinguished law professors from Yale, Stanford, Duke, USC, McGill, Boston University and USD.

APRIL culminates the academic year with the Nathanson Lecture by U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. There will be opportunities for USD students and alums to interact in smaller settings with Justice O'Connor.

We are proud to welcome another talented and energetic new member to the faculty: Michael Rappaport from Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, the U.S. Justice Department and Yale Law School. (See article in this issue.) Michael is teaching in the fields of environmental, insurance and banking law and soon will publish an article in the Wisconsin Law Review entitled "The Private Provision of Unemployment Insurance."

Out of more than 4,200 applicants, we have registered an outstanding first-year class. The median LSAT is 38, median GPA is 3.34, median age is 23 (29 for the evening division), minorities constitute 18 percent of the class, and women constitute 45 percent. Many came to us with advanced degrees: M.A., MBA, M.S. and M.E. degrees are most common and they are from such notable institutions as Harvard, Georgetown, Virginia, Dartmouth, Berkeley, Notre Dame, Minnesota, USC, UCLA and Northwestern. The most common undergraduate majors are accounting, business, communications, economics, English, finance, history, political science and psychology (with economics and political science ahead by far).

Our primary area of concern is the same as that of all other law schools right now: employment opportunities for graduates and alums. We have an extraordinarily powerful network in Southern California. I am told that approximately one out of four lawyers in the Greater San Diego area is a USD alum. A well-placed word from you to the people who make hiring decisions where you work could initiate a recruiting trip to USD Law School, a serious review of the resumes of USD students or an opportunity for an alum. This could result in a valuable addition to your firm while also permitting USD to showcase our excellent students and spread the word about the quality of our educational program.

Please read on. These pages reveal many more exciting developments at USD Law School. We also hope you notice and like the improved appearance of the Advocate.

On behalf of all the members of the Law School community, we appreciate your interest and support. We hope you share our pride in our progress and our commitment to continue and accelerate it. With friends such as you, the future for USD School of Law will be splendid.

Sincerely,

Kristine Strachan

The Judges Pate

Christine (Vetter '69) and William '71 Pate are part of a growing cadre of USD Alumni serving as judges and commissioners.

There is a remarkable and largely unpublicized statistic associated with the University of San Diego School of Law and its position in the legal life of San Diego County.

Currently, there are 74 judges or commissioners sitting on the benches of municipal, superior, state and federal courts who received their law degrees from USD, including Judith Keep, chief judge of the U.S. District Court. Of the 71 superior court judges in San Diego County, 18 hold USD law degrees. Among this group is the only husband and wife combination to sit on a superior court in the state of California: William and Christine Pate. Another USD husband and wife team are Judges Ernestine and Joseph Littlejohn of the San Diego Superior and Municipal Courts, respectively. Seven local judges and one commissioner are from the USD Law School class of 1971.

At least 56 judges in other parts of the region also hold USD degrees.

In some ways, the paths walked by William and Christine Pate, both 48, from the classes of 1971 and 1969, respectively, are typical of other alumni judges. But the Pates' paths have some unique twists.

William "Bill" Pate was born in Coronado and almost immediately connected with Christine Pate. Christine's mother was Bill's pediatrician. Her father was a dentist and one-time mayor of Coronado.

Christine, also a native of Coronado, attended local schools. When she was a senior in high school, young Bill Pate asked her to Coronado High School's senior prom. She accepted and the two dated throughout the summer after high school graduation.

But, alas, college careers took them to separate cities. Bill enrolled at Whittier, Christine at the University of California-

Berkeley. Luckily, Whittier offered a field trip to honors students in its political science program. Bill took the trip to Sacramento and a side venture to Berkeley to see Christine, rekindling what was to become an ever more complex (logistically) relationship.

The Pates received their undergraduate degrees in 1965. Bill entered public administration for the city of Los Angeles and Christine went to Hastings to pursue her law degree.

After one year in Los Angeles, Bill enlisted in the officer training program of the U.S. Marine Corps. "I figured you should do a lot of things in your lifetime," Bill says now.

When Bill returned from Officers Candidate School, he and Christine were married. Christine now found herself married and living in Quantico, Va., with one year of law school completed. Then, in June 1967, Bill was sent to Vietnam. Christine came home to Coronado and entered USD's School of Law for her second year.

When Bill returned from duty, he was assigned to Camp Pendleton. A freer work schedule with the Marines left him just enough time to enroll in USD's night program.

"I showed up two weeks before classes were to start," Bill recalls. "I was sitting there right next to Sr. Furay. She was still wearing her habit at that time so she was an imposing presence."

During 1969, Christine graduated, took the bar and gave birth to the couple's first child, William Christopher. Bill graduated in 1971.

After that busy period, Christine took a month off, then went to work for the law firm that eventually became Jennings, Engstrand and Henrikson, the county's largest at the time. She eventually became the first female partner of that firm.

Bill went to work as a law clerk for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, then joined his former USD law professor, Stan Legro, in private practice. After Legro was appointed to the Environmental Protection Agency during the Ford administration, Bill joined other lawyers in private practice.

"One day," Christine remembers, "my two senior partners asked 'What would you think if Bill joined us?'"

At first Christine wondered how her senior position in the firm might affect Bill, but she need not have bothered.

"That was on a Tuesday," she explains. "I said, 'If you are interested, why not give him a call?' On Wednesday, I looked out my window and here comes Bill. By Saturday he was a full partner."

Bill both started and directed the firm's insurance defense department. By the time he was appointed to the bench in August 1986, that department had 15 attorneys.

Christine also had been mentioned as a candidate for the bench during this time, but had declined to apply for a variety of family reasons. Having four boys who played several sports required an extremely flexible schedule. But in 1988, when the boys were older, Christine applied and received an appointment. Both judges now sit on the San Diego Superior Court. Christine presides in a family law court; Bill has an independent calendar. At one time they served on the juvenile bench simultaneously.

The Pates' careers have been somewhat typical of other alumni who sit on the bench. In fact, their story helps explain why so many USD graduates have earned appointments.

"We just must be a sparkling group," offers El Cajon Municipal Court Judge Christine Goldsmith '76.

"These are awfully nice people," suggests Bill Winship, a private practice attorney whose USD class of 1971 has produced an inordinately large number of local judges.

"My opinion is that at USD we had a lot of mature students who had other life experiences before law school," Bill Pate says. "I think we were serious about the practice of law. That may have made USD people distinguish themselves. Plus, I think a lot of people had a public service goal as a motivating factor when they studied law."

Justice Gilbert Nares '67, who serves on the state's 4th District Court of Appeal with USD alumna Patricia Benke '74, thinks location is important.

"I think a lot of them stay here," Nares says. "San Diego is a wonderful place to practice, and, with the passage of time, many have simply made the career change. A lot of USD graduates are now the 'rainmakers' and decision makers in the large firms.

"Also," Nares notes, "USD and the San

"Currently, there are 74 judges or commissioners sitting on the benches of municipal, superior, state and federal courts who received their law degrees from USD. Diego legal community have really grown up together." [Editor's Note: Approximately one in four attorneys in San Diego is a USD law alum.]

Several other judges strike the same chord.

"First, the judiciary was expanding about 1971," Commissioner Duncan S. Werth II '71 says. "Secondly, our age group about that time arrived at a certain level of experience and expertise. When judges already on the bench retired, we were ready."

Christine Pate also credits a change in USD's Law School in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

"Things started changing," she explains. "They started a movement of finding full-time professors who were publishing and doing those things that make good professors. I think you find students reacting to that more, being more analytical and participatory ... the student body got into a Socratic method, not just following an outline."

That change, Christine Pate says, vastly improved the way graduates practiced law. "This carried over. The name of the game in making the bench is having a successful law career.

Plus," she adds, "The school has wanted to reach out in the community and be involved. It has become known as a school of excellence in programs involving the local legal community."

Judge David Danielsen '77, the latest USD alumnus to be appointed to the San Diego municipal court bench (December 1990), agrees with both theories.

"The practice of law in San Diego has changed completely," he says. "There are lots more vacancies. The bench got much larger and USD gave me a very good legal education and a very good practical education. I got to work with some very good lawyers when I was a student and got a fairly strong theoretical background."

Whatever the explanation for the large number of USD law graduates who now sit on the bench, there is no doubt about the influence they wield—a satisfying feeling for the faculty, students and alumni of the School of Law.

Criminal, Indigent Defense Issues Subject of New Education Series

When the U.S. Department of Justice enacted federal sentencing guidelines in 1987, its intent was to eliminate inequities in sentencing. However, the guidelines have met with the wrath of many defense lawyers and judges, who charge that they fail to take into account important factors in determining sentences and that they eliminate judicial discretion.

This controversial issue was the subject of the first program—a half-day symposium held Nov. 23—in a series on criminal and indigent defense programs to be presented at the USD School of Law over the next five years.

The series is being funded by a $200,000 grant from Community Defenders, Inc., a private, nonprofit corporation that provided legal services to indigents in criminal cases. Alex Landon '71, former executive director of Community Defenders, explains that when a public defender's office was created in San Diego there was no longer any need for CDI, so the board of directors voted to disband it.

"The money left in its account (was) disbursed to other nonprofit groups," Landon says. "A variety of grants were made, and one was to the USD Law School for programs to benefit the criminal and indigent defense bar."

Professor Laura Berend '75, who teaches in the Law School's legal clinic, says the school received one of the grants because of its strong clinic program, in which students handle "live clients" through civil, criminal, environmental and immigration cases under faculty supervision. Through this program, students also enroll in a variety of simulation courses.

A steering committee consisting of Berend, Landon and USD Law School Dean Kristine Strachan was formed to implement the new program. Berend says planning for the series is just beginning, but there will be other symposia, full-day workshops and perhaps short-term classes taught by visiting experts that will be open to students, lawyers, judges, legislators, faculty and members of the public. Most will carry MCLE credit, she adds.

Judy Clarke, former executive director of Federal Defenders and an opponent of the federal sentencing guidelines, spells out the controversy surrounding them. "The impetus for the guidelines was the unwarranted disparity in sentencing," she says. "There were vastly different sentences for similar crimes."

Concern for these disparities began to emerge in the 1950s and 1960s, and a commission to devise sentencing guidelines was finally formed in 1984. The guidelines were enacted in 1987 and determined to be constitutionally valid in 1989.

One perspective on the guidelines, which Clarke characterizes as the "mother, love and apple pie" view, is that they effectively eliminate the injustice of unequal sentencing. Critics, however, believe they have generated other injustices.

Describing the guidelines as a detailed set of mechanical rules, Clarke says judges view them as too binding because they eliminate discretion and defense lawyers view them as too harsh because they ignore the important individual characteristics of defendants.

"The biggest movement among defense lawyers is to repeal mandatory minimum sentences because there is no room for discretion," Clarke explains. "The other move is to make the federal sentencing guidelines nonbinding."

She sees little political support for such movements, however, because they are not seen as hard on crime. She says: "No politician can afford to be seen as weak on crime if he or she wants to be re-elected."

PANELISTS

The first program in a series on criminal and indigent defense issues featured a panel discussion moderated by Dean Gerald Uelmen of Santa Clara University's School of Law.

Panelists were: The Honorable J. Lawrence Irving, a former U.S. District Court judge who resigned in protest over the federal sentencing guidelines; Judy Clarke, former executive director of Federal Defenders of San Diego, Inc.; The Honorable Betty B. Fletcher, U.S. Court of Appeals, 9th Circuit; Roger Haines, assistant U.S. attorney, San Diego; Kevin Cole, professor of law at USD; Al Krieger, a defense lawyer from Miami, Fla; Harlan W. Penn, associate general counsel, Federal Bureau of Prisons; Donald (Andy) Purdy, chief deputy general counsel, U.S. Sentencing Commission; The Honorable Pamela Ann Rymer, U.S. Court of Appeals, 9th Circuit; F. Dennis Saylor, special counsel and chief of staff to the assistant attorney general; and Senior U.S. District Court Judge William Schwarzer, director of the Federal Judicial Center.

Rappaport Trades D.C. Limelight for USD Classroom

Michael Rappaport, an attorney with a strong background in practice and a keen interest in theory, has joined the faculty of the USD School of Law to teach environmental, banking and insurance law.

A 1985 graduate of Yale Law School, he served as clerk for Judge Dolores Sloviter in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit, then joined the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., as special assistant to the assistant attorney general.

Subsequently, he joined the Office of Legal Counsel in the Department of Justice, which advises the president of the United States and issues opinions binding on the executive branch.

Later, at the firm of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, he worked as an associate specializing in appellate litigation, and in that capacity drafted numerous briefs in connection with President Reagan's opposition to a subpoena from Admiral John Poindexter.

During this time Rappaport also worked on an interdisciplinary doctoral degree in law and political economy, which he received from the Yale Law School in 1990.

"It's hard to imagine the practice of law being more fun than that," Rappaport says of his days in the government. "It was high profile, with a lot of responsibility, and I was working with great lawyers."

Nevertheless, the lure of the academic side of the law was strong enough to induce him to apply for a position at USD. "It was a good fit — a nice area with a good faculty and school," he says. "I knew a number of USD grads who have done good things on the East Coast. You would think USD grads would be best known in the West, but they've had a lot of influence in the East, too."

Rappaport's academic interest is in analyzing areas in which government regulation and private-sector activity combine in order to find better methods of regulation.

"Why does regulation exist in the first place? What political forces are at work? Are there alternative ways to regulate? These are the kinds of questions I'm interested in," Rappaport says, adding that all the areas in which he will be teaching are in a state of rapid transformation. "There is a wealth of issues and things to think about."

Rappaport's twin goals as a School of Law faculty member are to be both the best scholar and the best teacher he can be, and he hopes to be able to give his students a realistic idea of what it's like to practice law, stressing skills that are often overlooked in law school, such as reading statutes. "That's something that's hard to do well and originally," he points out, "and it's something schools really need to teach."

Dean Kristine Strachan sums it up: "Mike has had an impressive career so far for such a young person. We're going to provide him with good students and stimulating colleagues — there should be no stopping him!"

Michael Rappaport brings a strong background to the USD School of Law.

Economic Guru Speaks

Friedman Discusses Free-Market Theories at Sharon Siegan Memorial Lecture

Milton Friedman, winner of the 1976 Nobel Prize for excellence in economics and one of the world's foremost free-market economic theorists, visited the USD School of Law on Oct. 24 to present the third lecture in the Sharon Siegan Memorial Lecture Series. Past speakers in the series have been The Honorable Robert Bork, former judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and James Buchanan, also a Nobel Prize winner for excellence in economics.

The series, established by the School of Law to honor the late Sharon Siegan, wife of Distinguished Professor Bernard H. Siegan, focuses on law and economics, an area of Professor Siegan's expertise.

In Friedman's address, entitled "The Role of Incentive in Government and Private Behavior," he updated his less-is-more critique of "government enterprise" before an enthusiastic audience. Among the topics he covered, Friedman said the overthrow of socialism in Eastern Europe is further proof that "government enterprises everywhere are a failure."

The events of the last two years in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union have focused great attention on free-market economics in general, and on Friedman's thinking in particular, Siegan notes. "The great contribution of Milton Friedman is that he has, in books and articles, explained the theory and benefits of capitalism," Siegan says. "The countries of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union have been unable to satisfy the economic concerns of their people. They have kept enormous numbers of people in poverty while insisting that their system was the best, and that 'capitalism doesn't work.'" Milton Friedman has shown otherwise, "that it does work, and better than socialism. His name stands for free-market economics worldwide," Siegan says. "When I was in Bulgaria, some officials identified the type of economic system they wanted by saying they wanted a Milton Friedman free-market economy. He has had a tremendous impact worldwide."

Because legal systems follow from economic systems, Siegan notes, Friedman's global economic influence carries over into the legal sphere as the countries of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union devise new legal systems to deal with their emerging non-socialist economies.

"In these countries there is no commercial code, no tort laws, no laws to cover buying and selling, offers and acceptance. It's almost a blank slate," he says.

He points out that the move to limit government regulation of business in this country also stems from the free-market thinking of which Friedman is a chief proponent.

Friedman is widely regarded as the leader of the Chicago School of monetary economics, which stresses the importance of the quantity of money as an instrument of governmental policy and as a determinant of business cycles and inflation. He has been a senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace since 1977. He also is a professor emeritus of economics at the University of Chicago.

He has published many books and articles on economic theory and he also has written extensively on public policy, emphasizing the preservation and extension of personal freedom. His most important books in this field are Capitalism and Freedom (with Rose D. Friedman), Bright Promises, Dismal Performance, Free to Choose (with Rose D. Friedman) and Tyranny of the Status Quo, which complemented a three-part public television series broadcast of the same name in the 1980s.

The Sharon Siegan Memorial Lecture Series recognizes Mrs. Siegan's contributions to her husband's work. A respected artist in her own right, she also was knowledgeable and involved with Professor Siegan's legal activities, and she helped plan numerous programs and conferences in the School of Law.

Milton Friedman drew one of the largest lecture audiences in USD Law School history.

Spain Family Endows Law Student Scholarship

James E. Spain '79 recently announced the establishment of the Spain Family Endowed Scholarship.

The endowment, a $400,000 gift to the School of Law from Spain's parents, will be used to provide general scholarship funds to deserving law students beginning in the fall of 1992.

For the Spain family, the gift is just the latest chapter in a long history of family involvement with USD.

"It is the most recent example of our family's support of the diocese and the university," Spain says. "And, because we believe that the Law School has developed a curriculum that is first-rate, we wanted to contribute to its continued growth and success."

Spain's grandmother was the first of the family to become actively involved in the Diocese of San Diego when it still included the community of San Bernardino, the family's hometown.

An uncle, Monsignor William Spain, served on USD's board of trustees from 1973 to 1984 and was active in diocesan and university affairs for many years. The family also has endowed a scholarship in the department of theological and religious studies at USD.

The senior Mr. and Mrs. Spain now reside in Newport Beach. Jim lives in San Diego and is a senior marketing associate for Iliff, Thorn and Company commercial real estate.

James E. Spain '79 will serve as the family's liaison for their newly established scholarship fund.

More than 250 Law Alumni Celebrate at Weekend Festivities

More than 250 USD law alumni returned to their legal origins over the 1991 Labor Day weekend to celebrate the first full-fledged USD Law Alumni Weekend.

"It was a huge success," declares alumnus Mark Siegel '86.

The weekend, organized by volunteers from the reunion classes of 1966, 1971, 1976, 1981 and 1986, Dean Kristine Strachan and a team from the alumni relations office, was packed with social and professional activities.

The idea, according to Alumni Relations Coordinator Susan Saxton, was for alumni to "have an opportunity to see how things have changed at the school, see old friends and match war stories."

Friday's calendar was filled with social events dedicated to the reunion classes. Functions ranged from the 1966 class cocktail reception and dinner to the 1986 marathon softball game to the 1971 party at classmate Sandy Shapery's penthouse in the Emerald Shapery Center in downtown San Diego.

The heart of the weekend began to beat on Saturday. Following registration and breakfast, alumni were invited to a forum debate featuring 15 distinguished panelists and moderated by Strachan. The discussion, modeled after a Cambridge-style forum, was entitled "Resolved: That the economics of the practice of law and legal education are contrary to the public interest of the United States." The panel wrestled with most of the current controversial issues (and proposed solutions) in law practice and legal education.

Strachan opened the debate with a hypothetical situation involving the crash of a truck carrying toxic chemicals. Would aggrieved parties with a diverse range of claims and economic situations find adequate counsel? If not, why not?

FORUM DEBATE PANELISTS

The following alumni and faculty participated in the debate held in Grace Courtroom on Saturday morning of Law Alumni Weekend:

Moderator

Dean Kristine Strachan

Panelists

Alan K. Brubaker '76

Partner, Wingert, Grebing, Anello & Brubaker

Rhonda L. Cartwright '86

Deputy Attorney General, California State Department of Justice

The Honorable Federico Castro '71

San Diego Superior Court, Juvenile Division

Robert C. Fellmeth

USD Professor of Law and Director, Center for Public Interest Law

The Honorable Gilbert Harrelson (Retired)

San Diego Superior Court

The Honorable Richard D. Huffman

Associate Justice, California Court of Appeal, 4th District and USD Adjunct Professor

Lou Kerig

USD Professor of Law

Alex L. Landon '71

Attorney at Law and USD Adjunct Professor

Herbert I. Lazerow

USD Professor of Law

The Honorable Harry R. McCue '66

U.S. Magistrate

Denise McGuire '76

San Diego Deputy District Attorney

The Honorable William C. Pate '71

San Diego Superior Court

Abby B. Silverman '79

Partner, Baker & McKenzie

The Honorable Michael D. Wellington '71

San Diego Superior Court

Lise A. Young '81

Associate, Craig & Shepherd of Chico, Calif.

The panelists debated for two hours in a lively and sometimes hilarious manner. Hard questions brought insightful answers from panelists. Unsuspecting participants in the audience got into a Socratic dialogue with each other and the dean.

"I was delighted with it," says Gary Schons '73, '76 (J.D.). Schons, a prosecutor with the state attorney general's office and the chair of the 1976 reunion, called Strachan's handling of the panel "fantastic." "It was both entertaining and educational at the same time. I think it could be an integral part of the weekend in the future." [Editor's Note: MCLE credit will be available at future reunions.]

After lunch, alumni toured the new Pardee Legal Research Center.

Later, the dean and about 20 faculty members greeted alumni at a cocktail reception in the Hahn University Center.

"That was one of the highlights on Saturday," says Rhonda Cartwright '86, who chaired the weekend activities. "We had a lot of faculty members show up. Many commented to the dean how much they enjoyed the evening."

Strachan also was delighted to see so many faculty and alumni together. "Was it a success? All you needed to do was feel the fun in the room that evening ... it was wonderful. I was especially pleased to meet legendary former Dean Joe Sinclitico who joined the class of '66 for dinner. I was beginning to think he was apocryphal."

Each class gathered in separate campus locations for dinner, but reunited for a dance featuring music spanning the '50s, '60s and '70s.

Although most alumni were impressed with almost everything about the weekend's calendar, many felt Labor Day weekend hindered rather than enhanced the turnout. According to Saxton, the Law Alumni Weekend will be moved to Sept. 18 and 19, 1992, for the classes of 1962, 1967, 1972, 1977, 1982 and 1987.

Professor Darrell Bratton and class reunion alumnus Craig Ramseyer '81 share a law school memory.

Former Dean Joe Sinclitico and Dean Kristine Strachan compare notes on the life and times of a law school dean. Dean Sinclitico joined the 1966 class dinner.

'86

Cheryl R. Somerville died of cancer Nov. 16, 1991. She was an associate at Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison.

The School of Law community extends deepest sympathy to the families and friends of the deceased.

Faculty Footnotes summarizes the professional achievements of current USD law faculty.

Professor C. Hugh Friedman published the 1991 edition of his two-volume Corporate Treatise - California Practice Guide: Corporations (The Rutter Group) published. He currently is working on next year's edition.

Adjunct Professor Richard D. Huffman received an "Outstanding Alumnus" award from California State University, Long Beach. He served on a peer review panel for the National Institute of Justice to examine proposed research on criminal justice issues. He also served as an instructor for the Continuing Judicial Studies Program on criminal trials.

Professor Bert Lazerow was selected to be in Who's Who in American Law, 7th edition. He also directed the 1991 Institute of International and Comparative Law Summer Program in Paris. A total of 276 people were enrolled in the various programs, including 110 enrolled in the Paris program. Lazerow expanded the program's cooperation with USD's School of Business Administration to offer two business school courses in Paris and in Oxford. The Paris program moved to a new location in Marais, a district of 17th century mansions within walking distance of the courts. The new facility is part of the University of Paris I.

Professor Grant Morris conducted a workshop entitled "Assessing Competence" at the 1991 Patients' Rights Advocacy training conference in San Francisco on Aug. 23. The program informed participants on how to evaluate a mental patient's competence to refuse anti-psychotic medication.

Professor Theresa Player's book entitled California Trial Techniques was published by Parker & Sons in September 1991. The co-authors with Player are Bob Clifford and Rex Perschbacher. Rex was a faculty member at USD from 1979-1981. One of the contributing authors is Mike Meaney '75.

Professor Michael Rappaport is publishing an article accepted for publication in the Wisconsin Law Review entitled "The Private Provision of Unemployment Insurance."

Adjunct Professor Richard A. Shaw has completed an active summer lecturing program. He chaired the NYU Tax Institute program on Closely Held Corporations in New York and in San Francisco. In June, he presented a two-hour ALI-ABA advanced partnership tax program lecture on the tax consequences of dispositions of partnership interests. At the American Bar Association annual meeting in Atlanta, he presented a program on tax proposals for simplifying Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code.

Professor Lester B. Snyder is completing an article on "Investor Losses in Savings and Loan Takeovers: Tax Laws as a 'Bailout' of a Third Kind."

Dean Kristine Strachan has been appointed to the President's Advisory Council of the Law School Admission Council. She has also been elected as a member of the board of directors of the San Diego Volunteer Lawyer Program.

On Oct. 2, Professor Jorge Vargas had 25 students from the University of Baja California in the master's program in Border Economic Law tour USD's Law School and Pardee Legal Research Center. They observed how Lexis works and attended class to see how American legal education is conducted. Professor Vargas also teaches at Baja. On Oct. 4, the Master of Comparative Law students visited Judge Robert Coates' courtroom in downtown San Diego to acquaint themselves with how a trial is conducted.

Professor Don Weckstein's second edition of Professional Responsibility in a Nutshell (with R. Aronson) was published in August 1991 by West Publishing Company. He was appointed by Mayor Tom Bradley and confirmed by Los Angeles City Council to become a member of the Los Angeles City Employee Relations Board, which is chaired by Josiah Neeper, USD legal counsel and adjunct professor. Professor Weckstein presented a paper on court referred mediation on Sept. 16 to the San Diego Chapter of Society of Professionals in Dispute Resolution (SPIDR) and served as a panelist on "Lawyer Rainmaking in the '90s" presented by the San Diego County Bar Association on Sept. 24. He also served as the chair of the labor and employment programs planning committee of the International SPIDR meeting held in San Diego Oct. 14 - 20, where he presented a paper on arbitration of employment discrimination complaints.

Professor Paul Wohlmuth participated in a multidisciplinary seminar on his recently published paper (with L.J. Goldberg) "Contractual Allocation of Resources Reconsidered: Value, Markets and the Myths of Human Autonomy" on Oct. 23 at Washington and Lee University. The paper was also presented at the workshop of the Conference on Systems Science and Law at St. John's College in Annapolis, Md., and at the annual meeting of ISSS in Ostersund, Sweden.

Professor Fred Zacharias has published "Structuring the Ethics of Prosecutorial Trial Practice: Can Prosecutors Do Justice?" in 44 Vanderbilt Law Review 45 (1991).

Dear Friends,

As chairman of the Law Alumni Annual Fund for both 1990-91 and 1991-92, I am pleased to thank so many alumni and friends of the Law School for their financial support. All donors to the USD School of Law during 1990-91 (from Sept. 1, 1990, to Aug. 31, 1991) are included in this Law Honor Roll of Donors. The list includes more than 1,200 individuals and organizations.

All of these donors made contributions either to the Pardee Legal Research Center Capital Campaign or the Law Annual Fund. The majority of the donors are listed for their gifts of capital support to renovate and expand the law library. This extremely important and successful campaign is at its conclusion with cash and pledge commitments totaling nearly $6 million, which was the cost of the project. Alumni, in particular, reached out as never before to support the Law School. As alumni, we knew best the need to replace the old facility. We can take great pride in our commitment to this project.

Many donors' contributions were directed to the Law Annual Fund which supports annual needs of the law school, including student financial assistance, academic programs, the library collection and student organizations. As the capital campaign draws to a close, the priority for support will transfer to the Law Annual Fund with a focus on the programs mentioned above.

On behalf of Dean Kristine Strachan, the faculty, students and the Law Alumni Association board of directors, I thank you for your generosity to the USD School of Law.

Sincerely,

G. Edward Arledge '73
